The Divided City

In the city of Neolia, children lived separated into groups, avoiding those who looked different from them. Stereotypes and prejudices kept them apart, preventing them from truly knowing one another.

The Arrival of Kenzo

One day, a mysterious young man with silver hair and blue eyes appeared. His name was Kenzo, a superhero from another world, gifted with the ability to see people's hearts and change the course of the future.

The Revelation of Truth

Kenzo noticed that the children feared differences because no one had ever shown them the value of friendship beyond the boundaries of prejudice. Using his magical power, he revealed to them a vision of the future: a city where all children played together, filled with joy and acceptance.

The Trial of Friendship

Kenzo created a magical arena where the children had to work together to overcome challenges and obstacles. As they collaborated, they discovered that there was no real difference between them—only ignorance that had kept them apart.

Breaking the Chains

Through teamwork and solidarity, their prejudices faded away. The children laughed together, shared stories, and became friends. Families became more open-minded. Kenzo smiled at them and said, "Fear is born from the unknown. Now that you know each other, nothing can separate you." His mission was complete.
